

ATTACK IN ROME . . .

From the quiet street came a woman's cry. It was quick, startled – strangled into silence. A car waited with its nose pointing from the kerb – ready to leave.

A man and a woman stood rigid . . . the rigidity of force equally matched. The woman – a girl it was – drew back with desperate strength. The man, one hand on her wrist, another clamped over her mouth, was trying to drag her into the car . . .

'A sophisticated thriller. The story builds up to an exciting climax.'

TLS

'She can hang up her cloak and dagger right there with Eric Ambler and Graham Greene.'

NEWSWEEK

U.K. £1.75